Broadcast Journalism Senior

Studied graphic design in community college; but changed major to broadcast journalism after transferred to San Jose State University, after found myself with much passion with news report. I realize, instead of letting the design to fulfill my dreams, news report can makes me even more complete. The interview is more fun than sketch a graphic; organize interview material is better than color my design; report makes me more proud than present my idea. So I changed my major, and want to become the international or Chinese news reporter, the story teller.

As a native Chinese, grew up in Taiwan and moved to California at age of 13, it makes my Chinese skill better than most of people in the state. In order to keep my culture and communication skills with me, I read and write Chinese everyday.

I always want to do Chinese or international news report, ever since I changed my major. My goal is to report local news in Chinese with profession to new immigrants in United States, and hope the profession will help non- English speakers to update the current events everyday. In bay area, far as in my knowledge, not many current Chinese news reporters have been train by mainstream news profession. Many reporters and anchors have carried Asian news report style to United States, and I believe this is not suitable for the viewers. People need more professions, not a reading machine. I don't wan this happen anymore. I want the new immigrants, or non- English speakers, to be able receive mainstream news report profession in their language, and they deserve it.

Since Chinese news report is my future goal, I have been doing many practices on my news writing style lately. The part time job I have in a non- profit organization provides me the opportunity to do so. Practices involve with the articles I write for the events happen in foundation. And after many times of proofread, I send those articles to Chinese newspaper company to ask them publish it for me. Not all the articles have been published, but I do keep some copies of the articles that once were published. Chinese readers are accepting and recognizing my writing after several times of publications. And I will work hard to make my aim closer to myself everyday.

I am a dreamer, and I dream of everything I can possible imagine. I am a sensitive person, and I can notice changes around me shortly. I am an explorer, and I love to find out the story behind every thing I see. National news or Chinese reporter is the career can fulfill my dream, my sensitivity, and my explorative characteristics. And I would like to report every truth to viewers in my career. I believe everyone has the right to know what happens, and how it happens in the world.
